

Table of Contents

1	Introduction: The Puzzles of the Carter Doctrine — 1
1.1	The General Argument — 5
1.2	Developing the Argument — 9
1.3	Mapping of the Argument — 15

Part 1: Mapping the Carter Doctrine: Traditional approaches

2	Explaining Why Foreign Policy Changed During the Carter Presidency — 19
3	Explaining How Foreign Policy Changed During the Carter Presidency — 32
3.1	Punctuated Equilibrium — 32
3.2	Planned Change — 46
4	Rethinking the Concept of Foreign Policy Change — 60

Part 2: Geographic mental maps and foreign policy change

5	Geographic Mental Maps and Foreign Policy Decision-making — 73
5.1	Defining Geographic Mental Maps — 76
5.2	Placing Geography in the Mental Map Concept — 79
5.3	From a Cognitive Psychological to a Social Psychological Approach to Geographic Mental Maps in FPA — 83
6	Social Cognition and Information Processing — 91
6.1	The Convergence Process: From Individual Mental Maps to Shared Mental Maps — 100
7	The Mechanisms of Change: Communicative Interaction — 104

Part 3: Re-mapping the Carter Doctrine: The Carter administration's geographic mental maps

8	Foreign Policy Decision-Making in the Carter Administration — 127
8.1	The Decision-Making Structure in the Carter Administration — 128
8.2	The Decision-Making Process and Dynamics — 139

10	Beyond Wishful Thinking — 177
11	Hic Sunt Dracones: Dangers on the Edge of the Map — 190
12	Iran and the Arc of Crisis — 207
13	Adjusting to a Changing Middle East — 228
13.1	Assuring the Possible Peace — 228
13.2	Probing the New Regime in Iran and Reevaluating US Strategy in the Middle East — 241
14	Maps of Fear and War — 253
14.1	The Iranian Hostage Crisis — 253
14.2	Soviet Involvement in Afghanistan and the Consolidation of the Carter Doctrine — 259
14.3	Securing the Release of the Hostages — 272
15	Conclusion — 276
15.1	Issues of Contention and Debate — 278

Bibliography — 289

Index — 319