

CONTENTS

Preface

vii

1	Introduction: Changing Approaches to Human Geography	1
	Introduction	1
	The emerging concerns of geography in the late nineteenth and early twentieth centuries: environmental determinism and the regional concept	3
	The regional tradition, the quantitative revolution and spatial science	8
	The critique of spatial science and the emergence of alternative approaches in the 1970s and 1980s	13
	Geography, disciplinary boundaries and academic career paths	20
	Concluding comments	25
	Notes	25
2	Changing Times and the Development of Marxist Approaches to Human Geography Since the Late 1960s: Still Relevant and Radical After All These Years?	28
	Introduction	28
	From liberal to Marxist critiques of society	32
	The search for mature reflections	42
	Engagement with social theory and reconsideration of the role of structures	45
	From reformulation to fractious disintegrations?	50
	Concluding remarks	54
3	'Peopling' Human Geography and the Development of Humanistic Approaches	57
	Introduction	57

4	Structuration Theory: Anthony Giddens and the Bringing Together of Structure and Agency	93
	A middle ground between structure and agency?	93
	Giddens's structurationist project: phase I	96
	Giddens's structurationist project: phase II	107
	Structuration in human geography: two examples	116
	A concluding summary of critique	128
5	Realist Approaches in Human Geography	132
	All roads lead to realism?	132
	A realist philosophy	135
	Applying realist philosophy to social science	139
	Realism, social science and human geography	144
	Realistic practice in human geography	152
	Evaluating the contribution of realism to human geography	158
	Concluding summary of critical reactions to realism	166
6	The Differences of Postmodern Human Geography	170
	Introduction	170
	Considering postmodernism as object	171
	Considering postmodernism as attitude	184
	Coda to postmodern human geography	200
	Epilogue	202
	References	209
	Author Index	235
	Subject Index	239